MANSFIELDERS TO GET RULES ON AIR RAIDS

45,000 Circulars Telling of Precautions Received by Defense Officials.

TASK FOR WARDENS

Kalbfleisch Says Information To Be Distributed to All Homes In City.

Approximately 45,000 circulars telling Mansfielders the precautions they should take during an air attack were received today by Mansfield civilian defense officials and will be distributed to the public within the next two weeks.

Judge G. E. Kalbfleisch, chairman of the civilian defense committee, said the circulars will be distributed by 404 air raid wardens who will be named within the next 10 days.

Kalbfleisch said that wardens were being selected and would be assigned to certain sections of the city.

The circulars, received from national civilian defense headquarters, urge residents to meet their air raid warden and to cooperate with him. They also give rules of behavior during air raids.

The wardens will be given 30 days of intensive training in air raid work and supplemental courses. They will be ordered to contact all homes in their section and to prepare them for protection against attacks.

Included in the rules for helping air raid wardens are the following:

1. Have him meet every member of your family.
2. Tell him where you may be found and where you work.
3. Tell him about any member of the household who is ill or handicapped. Tell him about all small children.
4. Show him the room you intend to use as a refuge room, ask his suggestions for fitting it up. Follow them—he knows!
5. Ask him what the official raid warning signals will be.
6. Show him your attic or gar-

Shatter Window To Arrest Boy, 15, In Stolen Auto

Police were forced to break the glass in a car door early today to capture a 15-year-old Butler youth who locked himself in a stolen automobile in an attempt to evade officers who blocked the car's path on Diamond street near Central park. A second car was recovered by deputy sheriffs early today two hours after it was stolen.

The boy, who was cited less than a year ago on a similar charge, was held by county juvenile authorities today in connection with the theft of the car which is owned by Walter Wareham, Butler school board member. It was stolen Wednesday night from his garage.

Patrolman W. M. Colby saw the stolen car about 1:30 a. m. today near Fourth and Main streets. He called a police cruiser which headed off the youthful driver near the park. The youth refused to let officers in the car and they smashed the glass to get him out.

Deputy Sheriffs John Whitcomb and J. R. Hetler recovered a car owned by Glenn Heiss, Mansfield R. D. 4, at the Hickory Hall school southeast of the city at 1:30 a. m. today, about two hours after it was reported stolen from a parking lot at a tavern on U. S. route 30 east of the city.

DISPLAY 'WAR PARTS' IN CITY

Mansfield First In U. S. to Be Visited by Exhibits Of Needed Items.

Mansfield was selected today as the first city in the nation to play host to a "War parts wanted" display that will tour industrial cities to show manufacturers the items which their plants may be able to produce.

The display, comprising two specially built 35-foot trailer trucks, will be shown in Mansfield Monday, Feb 9, it was announced at Cleveland by C. R. Terry, Ohio director of the Division of Contract Distribution of the War Production board.

The Mansfield visit will be the first stop in a swing that will take the display to 25 cities. On the following day, Tuesday, Feb. 10, the display will be shown in Ashland. Terry pointed out that Ohio is the first state to have these truck displays.

The Chamber of Commerce will make arrangements to have representatives of all local industrial plants present, according to John G. Routzon, secretary-manager.

The truck display is another step in the effort to speed war production by expediting parts output. The OPM staged a similar meeting for manufacturers of this area in Mansfield last Sep-

MEETS 'FATE'

Fortune Teller Killed; It 'Was In Her Palm.'

LOS ANGELES— (INS) — "Madame" Lorraine, internationally known fortune teller, met a violent death amid the mystic trappings of her seance room early today. She was shot to death by her pretty blonde assistant and "adopted" daughter, Charlotte Jean Le Nord, 25.

The girl said the shooting was an accident, but police held her on suspicion of murder when she admitted that it followed a quarrel over her having parked her car in front of the Lorraine residence instead of its usual place in the rear.

"It was in her palm," the girl said of the mystic's death. "Her life-line ended in a star. The madame said that meant violent death."

President Very Grateful for Birthday Gifts From Nation

(By Associated Press)

WASHINGTON — President Roosevelt today turned back to his wartime tasks, "very grateful," he declared, for the nationwide celebrations of his 60th birthday which produced uncounted sums for the fight against infantile paralysis.

Twenty-three Hollywood stars lent glamor to the birthday celebrations here They had luncheon at the White House, witnessed the president's "thank you" broadcast to the nation, and made personal appearances at half a dozen balls and three theaters.

Four-year-old Gerry King, New York boy who is recovering from infantile paralysis, was a guest at the White House lunch along with the stars. Dressed in a new sailor suit, he shook hands with the president and left him a birthday present—a model airplane carrier.

Mrs. Roosevelt represented the chief executive at the cutting of his 650-pound birthday cake, the highlight of a dance attended by thousands at a huge arena Cinema's Mickey Rooney got two slices

The president was host to a group of intimate friends at a White House dinner, preceding his broadcast to the millions of Americans gathered for dinners, dances and parties in all parts of the nation.

In that speech, he declared that the fact this nation could look after the health of its people while engaged in war demonstrated that the people definitely expect to win through to a sound peace.

The president said he had been authorized by the trustees of the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis to announce that county chapters may use part of this year's funds to give special assistance to the children of soldiers, sailors and marines who may fall victim to the disease.

SALES DROP

Gasoline Consumption Falls Off 30 Per Cent in Chicago.

CHICAGO —(INS)— Officials of the Gasoline Retailers association today estimated that gasoline sales in the Chicago area have fallen off 30 per cent since tire rationing began.

CALL STRIKE

Welders Order Walkout at West Coast Shipyard.

SEATTLE, Wash.—(U P)—Independent welders, locked in a jurisdictional fight with the American Federation of Labor, called a strike at Puget Sound shipyards today in the first serious labor dispute since the United States entered the war.

The walkout order already was effective in the Seattle-Tacoma Shipbuilding corporation plant at Tacoma, where the United Welders, Cutters and Helpers Union (independent) claims 1,180 members.

Dave Basor, executive secretary of the union, said 1,600 members would strike today in five Seattle shipyards.

Tacoma members voted to strike last night because the firm refused to rehire nine members discharged for non-payment of dues to the AFL Boilerworkers Union.

'DIME MARCH' FUND GROWING

Chairman Reports Donations From School Children, More Checks Swell Total.

Mansfield and Richland county contributed more liberally than ever before to the "March of Dimes" campaign conducted to help fight infantile paralysis judging from early reports received by Mrs. Louise M. Reese, county chairman, today.

The pennies, nickels and dimes of city and county school children have already totalled $158 and reports are far from complete as the "wishing well" coin containers scattered in schools and other public places throughout the county will not be collected until next week.

Mrs. Reese announced that the largest single contribution to the campaign so far was the gift of $31.50 presented by the Italian-American Citizens of Mansfield. Other contributions reported exclusive of schools, amounted to $296.

Collections from the seven Richland county motion picture theaters are also expected to add substantially to the fund.

The skating party at the Coliseum last night, the only public party held in the county in observance of President Roosevelt's sixtieth birthday, will also add to the fund.

Half the proceeds were donated to the "March of Dimes," by Harry Denis, Coliseum manager, and the affair drew more than 500 participants and spectators.

Skating contests featured the party and the winners were presented with defense savings stamps donated by the county "Fight Infantile Paralysis" committee, and a grand prize donated by Sam Fox, jeweler

NANKING UNIT DESERTS JAPS

Entire Division, Fully Equipped Goes Over to Chinese Side.

CHUNGKING—(U P)—An entire division of the Japanese-equipped Nanking army, spurred by United States participation in the war, has deserted the Japanese-sponsored Wang Ching-Wei government, joining the Chinese army with its arms and equipment, the official Chinese Central News agency said today.

Desertion of the 15th division of the Chinese side was regarded as presenting an important problem for the Japanese, who had counted on Wang Ching-Wei's "peaceful national salvation army" to hold vast areas of occupied China for them while Japanese troops were campaigning in the South Seas. Other Nanking forces were expected to follow the 15th division into Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek's army.

DUTCH FIGHT FURIOUSLY ON INVADED ISLE

Enemy Launches Full Scale Drive on Important Naval Base.

SUPPLIES THREATENED

Nipponese Ships, Aircraft Shell Island, Open Fifth Front.

(By International News Service)

BATAVIA — A furious battle progressed today on the island of Ambon where Japanese forces yesterday launched a full-scale invasion

Ambon island is the site of The Netherlands East Indies second most important naval base. It is in the Ceram sea between Celebes and New Guinea.

Informed quarters said the attack on Ambon in addition to threatening the naval base was aimed apparently at cutting the United Nations supply route to Australia. Ambon island is only about 600 miles above the Australian port of Darivin.

The new Japanese invasion opened up a fifth front in the battle of the East Indies.

The Japs launched a furious assault on Ambon from air and sea and today, as the battle progressed in full ferocity, the struggle was officially reported to be 'raging everywhere"

A comunique issued by The Netherlands Indies high command said that this morning "enemy ships and aircraft were shelling and bombing the islands and the battle was raging everywhere."

Hard fighting Netherlands Indies forces are delaying and in many places holding Japanese troops which have affected landings at four points in the rich Dutch island empire, N. E. I., military headquarters said.

Every report, according to military headquarters, indicated valiant and stubborn resistance was being offered. Successes of United Nations aircraft and ships blasting at the Japanese transport armada in Macassar Strait have aided the defenders of Dutch cities.

(Macassar Strait lies between Dutch Borneo and the Dutch island of Celebes The Japanese armada was estimated to consist of more than 100 ships)

At Balik Papan, oil center on the eastern Borneo coast, fighting was said to be continuing within the city limits, although the "scorched earth," policy had been followed there and the city previously reported evacuated.

Military quarters asserted that lack of news from three other areas—Kendari on Celebes island, the Minahassa Peninsula of Celebes and Pontianak in western Borneo—can be interpreted to

British Troops Retreat Across Johore Strait

Battle of Malaya Ends, Defenders Hope To Hold Bastion Until Help Comes; Peninsula Tip Bombed Heavily As Main Force Withdraws.

By HAROLD GUARD
(UP Staff Correspondent)

SINGAPORE—British empire troops, beaten back by an overwhelming Japanese attack, withdrew today from the mainland of Malaya and the battle for Singapore began.

The British, Australian and Indian troops who had fought for weeks with impossible odds against more than 100,000 Japanese shock troops, withdrew to this island during the night under cover of a rear guard which held the causeway across the strait, and a bombardment by all guns of the island garrison which could be brought into action.

Naval forces, at the naval base at the northeast side of the island, and planes of the British and Australian air forces aided in covering the withdrawal.

The general headquarters communique announcing the withdrawal said:

"Today we stand beleaguered in our island fortress.

"Our task is to hold this fortress until help can come as assuredly it will come"

Japanese forces, pursuing their usual cautious tactics despite overwhelming numerical strength, made little attempt to interfere with the withdrawal.

As the last man crossed the causeway, demolition squads of the Royal Engineers, aided by men of the Royal Navy, made a breach in it of sufficient extent to prevent a Japanese crossing, and the island was under siege.

For nearly two months the Imperial forces, fighting in the lines until they were exhausted, often cut off and forced to fight their way through jungle and rubber plantations back to their own lines, had held back the hordes of Japanese troops including the crack Emperor's Guard.

They had fought under the constant attack of great fleets of Japanese bombing and fighter planes, which swept down on them unopposed except for occasional machine gun fire, a few British planes, and the fire of the scanty supply of anti-aircraft guns the Imperial forces had at their command.

It is now possible to say that the Imperials, with their few numbers, their lack of airplanes, and Japanese command of the sea, had hoped only to fight a gallant delaying action which would hold the Japanese and impose the greatest number of casualties, while reinforcements were started toward them.

Now they proposed to hold this island under the attack of Japanese planes and land guns, and possibly of warships.

The communique announcing the withdrawal said:

"Last night in accordance with a pre-arranged plan our forces which had been operating in Southern Johore Sultanate were withdrawn into the island of Singapore. . . .

It had been my fortune, on a visit to the fighting front on the mainland yesterday, to see the beginning of the end.

I had seen the imperial forces moving up to the north shore of the island, ready for a fight to the finish in a siege, while only a few miles to the north of the strait the British, Australian and Indian troops fell back, fighting their rear guard action, toward the southern tip of the mainland and the causeway.

The entire tip of the Peninsula up to the front was a bombing zone, and on the visit to ad-

LUZON: MacArthur Men Halt Infiltration By Japanese Forces

(By United Press)

WASHINGTON—Gen. Douglas MacArthur reported today that his forces captured some Japanese prisoners and "frustrated" repeated enemy attempts to infiltrate his Batan province lines.

Action was only on a "sporadic" scale, MacArthur reported. The Japanese apparently were continuing to shift their forces in preparation for a new heavy assault on the virtual siege lines held by American and Filipino troops on the narrow peninsula.

"There was sporadic fighting on the Batan peninsula," the war department communique reported, "during the past 24 hours. Determined enemy attempts at infiltrating through our lines were frustrated. Some Japanese prisoners were taken Practically no hostile air activity was noted."

The continued absence of Japanese planes seemed to indicate that Japan is throwing virtually all the aircraft at her disposal into the siege of Singapore and the developing attack on the Dutch East Indies and the approaches to Australia

Gen. Douglas MacArthur reported that the Japanese commander, Lieut. Gen. Masaharu Homma, is moving up strong forces of fresh troops along the narrow Batan peninsula front.

MacArthur's forces were unmoved—either by frontal Japanese attacks or a Japanese propaganda campaign, crudely designed to separate the Filipino and American troops.

AFRICA: Axis Holds Bengasi As Indian Units Pass Lines

(By International News Service)

CAIRO—Axis forces retained control of Bengasi today but two hard-fighting British Indian columns managed to fight their way through enemy lines to rejoin the main British body.

These Indian columns were part of the brigade which fought a rear guard action while British forces were evacuating the port in the face of strong enemy mechanized columns.

An official communique declared that there had been no change in the general situation around Bengasi.

Giving a resume of the past 48 hours or more of fighting in western Cyrenaica, the communique said:

"There has been no change in the situation around Bengasi.

"Further information reveals that after fiercely contesting possession of the positions covering Bengasi for nearly 48 hours, against considerable odds, the seventh Indian infantry brigade decided to break through on the night of Jan. 29.

"By that time the enemy had established themselves astride the road leading north of Bengasi to Tongra, in spite of the efforts of the Indians to dislodge them, and also at Regima on the road lead-

NEWSPAPERARCHIVE®

GEN. JOHNSON:

By GEN. HUGH S. JOHNSON

WASHINGTON — There is getting to be something mysterious — almost uncanny — about MacArthur's resistance in Batan. The exact number of his troops is not publicly known. It is frequently said that he is opposed by hundreds of thousands of Japs—as high as ten to one.

Gen. Johnson.

Doubtless there are that many Japanese soldiers in the Philippines. But no such force could be used to advantage to attack that narrow defensive front—especially when the mountainous terrain is so nearly impossible that only a small fraction of that force could be deployed and maneuvered.

A large proportion of those Japanese troops must be employed in occupying at least the key points in Luzon, Mindanao and elsewhere. This does not detract from MacArthur's remarkable performance because, while the force he confronts is not as great as the figure most frequently used, the fact remains that the Japanese have available all the assault troops they can use in such a battle.

Furthermore, they have almost unhampered access to supplies, and, if they do not have the very necessary element of air supremacy, it is because they choose to use it elsewhere. Thus on ordinary military standards MacArthur's sustained resistance remains a mystery and breaks many of the rules in the book of strategy.

Another question, the answer to which must be known to the war department but is a secret from the general public, is "where does MacArthur get his supplies?"

There is apparently no open water to Subic bay. But he still retains Corregidor as the anchor to his left flank. That fortress has long been stocked with sufficient materials — ammunition, food and clothing to resist a siege of months.

Presumably, as long as he can maintain communications, through Mariveles and across Manila bay with Corregidor, he will not collapse from want of material.

A third astonishing thing is that troops which have never been exposed to this kind of fire and fighting should give such a superlative account of themselves. While there are a few notable exceptions, it is almost a general rule that raw troops coming for the first time under the withering effects of fire in a major engagement behave badly.

When there have been exceptions it is usually because of outstanding professional leadership or because they are sandwiched in between veteran formations. MacArthur's performance and that of the marines at Wake island should not give us exaggerated ideas about what to expect from these new divisions we are so rapidly forming out of the hundreds of thousands of boys we are selecting from civil life.

Those Wake island marines were regulars. A large part of MacArthur's men are Philippine scouts — the island's "regular army" over which Douglas has labored for years. Properly trained and led, the little brown brother makes as good a soldier as any man in uniform. Most of MacArthur's other troops are seasoned American veterans.

But these new formations of ours that we are getting ready to send "anywhere on earth," on the average do not have much more than 10 per cent of officers who were in the service three years ago. There simply have not been sufficient time and equipment to bring these troops up to modern standards.

There is little to say about the defense of Batan except to marvel at it. But there is to be drawn from it this lesson—don't expect another such marvel every time our troops go under fire.

FARM SENATORS CALL WICKARD FOR QUESTIONS

Want Explanation of Parity Stand, Ignore Criticism By Roosevelt.

(By Associated Press)

WASHINGTON — Farm state senators brushed aside President Roosevelt's criticism of agricultural provisions of the price control law and called on Secretary of Agriculture Wickard today for a statement of his policies under the measure.

The senate agriculture committee summoned Wickard to testify at a closed session in connection with his recent statements that farm prices ought not to go much over parity.

In signing the price control bill yesterday, President Roosesaid that there was real danger in a provision which prevents the fixing of ceilings on agriculture products below 110 per cent of parity, a basic price calculated to give farmers equality in purchasing power with others.

Although the president said that, if need be, congress could be asked to correct the 110 per cent parity section by amending the law, farm bloc members made it plain any such proposal would provoke a bitter controversy.

Senator Gillette (D.-Iowa) said he would oppose any change of this nature and predicted that it would be defeated. That latitude of 10 per cent, he told reporters, was the only means of assuring farmers that they actually would get parity for what they produced.

Senator O'Mahoney (D.-Wyo.) asserted further that parity, as established in the past, has lost its practical relationship to agricultural prices because the major share of industrial production soon would be in war goods and not the things that farmers buy.

Wickard faced extensive questioning from agricultural committee members determined to learn how he intended to use the veto power he possesses over the fixing of ceilings on farm products. Under terms of the new law, Leon Henderson, who is to be named administrator, cannot establish any farm price of which Wickard does not approve.

QUIZ BROTHERS AFTER SLAYING

Detectives Report 5 Rifle Bullets Fired Into Victim's Body.

(By United Press)

CLEVELAND — Detectives questioned three west side brothers today in an effort to solve the mysterious rifle slaying of Samuel Fadek, 55, filling station owner.

Someone fired at least five rifle bullets into Fadek's body last night as he sat at a desk in his station, according to Detective Sergeant Martin Cooney.

The brothers were taken into custody for questioning after a woman witness identified bertilion photographs of the eldest as the man she saw run away from the station with a rifle in his hands.

Police could ascribe no motive for the crime. There was no apparent attempt to rob Fadek. Sergeant Cooney said the killer apparently sneaked outside the station and fired six shots through a window. At least three struck Fadek and then the gunman walked inside and fired two shots into the body slumped over the desk. Several slugs were found imbedded in the station walls.

The man identified by the woman is a 23-year-old former Ohio reformatory inmate. He served a term from June, 1937, until paroled in October, 1940, on a robbery conviction. He was returned in April, 1941, for parole violation after being implicated in a Brookside park shooting. He was released again four months ago.

Up and Down the Street

The 79-year-old bell that used to call attorneys to hearings at the courthouse was offered for sale today by the county. For nearly a half-century the big bell has been stored in the courthouse attic, but with metal needed now in the war program, commissioners decided to bring it out and put it to work. The bell weighs about a thousand pounds and county commissioners were told it is worth from seven to 11 cents a pound. The bell contains a quantity of tin and even some silver.

Nurses in the Mansfield health department were given a chance to show their skill during an emergency this morning. Service-Safety Director C. M. Crafton suffered a severe burn on his left hand when a book of matches he was using ignited. Crafton asked nurses to give him first aid and emerged from the health department with his hand swathed in bandages. Although the burn was painful, Crafton said that it would not interfere with his work except for the use of the telephone which he handled like a contortionist, putting the receiver to his left ear while holding it with his right hand.

FORECASTS JAP-GERMAN PINCER MOVE

Russians Told Nippon Likely To Act If It Seizes Rule In South Pacific.

(By International News Service)

WASHINGTON — Responsible diplomatic quarters in Washington today disclosed that the United States has warned Soviet Russia of the danger of a Japanese attack on Siberia if the Nippon forces succeed in gaining control of the southern Pacific.

The warning has been delivered informally in the course of conversations between representatives of the two governments.

The United States has not gone so far as to suggest to Russia that it should immediately enter the Pacific conflict. The effort has been directed more at having the Soviet government bear in mind the dangers it will face if the United Nations are driven from their bases in the South Pacific.

It has been pointed out to the Russians that such an eventuality, should it occur, would leave the Japanese free to marshal their forces for a spring offensive against Russia, a campaign that probably would take the form of a pincers move, with Germany attacking simultaneously in the west.

Japanese control of the American, British and Dutch possessions in the South Pacific would, in the opinion of this government, give Japan access to the raw materials she needs for a long war; enable her to adopt a defensive role in holding those posessions, and thus free large forces of her army and air force for action against Siberia.

The implication of the views expressed to the Soviet representatives is that it might be better for Russia to strike first should it become apparent that the ABCD (America, Britain, China and the Dutch) powers were not going to be able, by their own efforts at this time, to prevent Japan from gaining control of the south Pacific area.

Soviet Russia's position since the outbreak of the Pacific conflict has been that the interests of the United Nations cause would best be served by permitting Russia to concentrate on continuing to drive the Nazis back in the west.

However, the Moscow press in recent days has been issuing sharp warnings to Japan that her armies will meet the same fate as the Germns if they attempt to invade Siberia.

Brown Bomber's Co-Pilot Named In Policy Racket

CHICAGO—(INS)—Julian Black, co-manager of heavyweight champion Joe Louis, and 25 other persons today were listed in grand jury indictments returned following a month-long investigation into the policy or "numbers" racket.

The formal charge was conspiracy to conduct lotteries. Besides Black, defendants will include the three Jones brothers, Edward, George and McKissack McHenry, who were indicted in 1940 for income tax evasions totaling $1,020,000.

The investigation followed renewed charges that the policy racket was netting $10,000,000 a year from Chicago's Negroes. Rudolph W. Dvorak, assistant operating director of the Chicago crime commission, said today that he believed all the leading policy operators were among those indicted.

The twenty-six indicted included twenty-three Negroes and three white men.

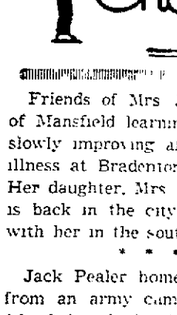
BROADWAY

—By Dorothy Kilgallen

Broadway Fantasia.

(I Can Dream, Can't I?)

IF SOME midnight I won a magic wand in a balloon at the Stork club, there are a few changes I would make in this fascinating and fast-moving village. Nothing serious. Just a few improvements. I'd forbid and remove all neon signs over Broadway, and arrange the substitution of the infinitely more glamorous, twinkling, easy-on-the-eyes electric light bulbs that Thomas A. Edison invented. . . . I'd plant a few more trees here and there, because they look so beautiful in the Spring against the skyscrapers. . . . All male halves of night club dance teams would have the quasi-comedy Danny Kaye quality of Don Loper instead of the pale oiled suffering note that most of the others strike; and only the Hartmans, who make it an art, would be allowed to burlesque The Dance. . . . Every playboy would stay married to the belle he chose until death did them part. . . . Movies portraying our Army or Navy in low comedy vein would perish in their aluminum cans. . . . Every theater on Broadway would house a hit show.



Kilgallen

If I were Queen, Bing Crosby would sing for me after breakfast and Rosario and Antonio would dance for me after dinner. . . . All my subjects would wear Red Cross buttons . . . Wonderful Bobby Clark would be court jester. . . . I'd decree a national lottery to be paid off in defense bonds. . . . I'd chide, perhaps banish, the motion picture lassies whose notion of helping the country was posing beside a bomber with skirts draped above her knees.

If I were head of the Cabaret Board, I'd prohibit night club owners from allowing persistent female banditti to annoy ringside patrons with the "sale" at twenty times what they're worth in the corner drug store) of toy dogs, souvenir maracas, and wilted gardenias. . . . I'd abolish the ridiculous extra charge for bread and butter in the expensive restaurants, when you get it free in Childs. . . . I'd allow clubs to open their floor shows with a solemn and dignified rendition of the Star Spangled Banner, but I'd prohibit any red-white-and-blue finales with the chorines done up in the colors of the flag, because these are, patriotically speaking, vulgar.

If I were a producer, I'd mortgage the old homestead to induce Noel Coward to write an opus for Bea Lillie, and then I'd try to get Bea to come over and play in it. . . . I'd do a revival of "The Petrified Forest," with Leslie Howard and Peggy Conklin and Humphrey Bogart in their original roles. . . . I'd build a theater that had seats like the ones in the loge at the Capitol. . . . I'd give away a block of tickets nightly, including Saturday, to the U S O. . . . I'd bar critics who attend a $6.60 opening night (or even a $3.30 opening night, for that matter) and use their other seat for an overcoat and hat. . . . I'd advertise my show in motion picture studio fashion. . . . I'd model my ushers on the ones at the Music Hall and the Strand, never on those at the Paramount. . . . Oscar Levant would be my pit director. . . . I'd keep it clean!

SINGAPORE IN STATE OF SIEGE AFTER RETREAT

British Forces Fall Back to Island as Battle of Malaya Ends.

vanced headquarters I had my hardest experiences of the entire campaign.

Once, when a bomb stick burst near me as I lay prone on the ground, I was showered with slivers of rubber trees, loose earth and small shrapnel splinters.

I managed again to reach advanced headquarters, which are now within earshot of the guns. I found headquarters humming busily and I decided to return to Singapore.

(This was taken to indicate that headquarters were being removed to the south.)

All military areas were closely guarded and were strictly secret. Military policemen guided us afoot through the woodland which gives perfect cover.

We toured the northwest island area (where the strait is only about one mile wide at points), most of the time amidst military convoys which were taking up defensive positions.

Going in the opposite direction along the grassy roadside were a few isolated groups of natives, last of the evacuees, trudging silently with bundles containing their poor personal possessions.

At the naval base, to which the Japanese planes have paid particular attention recently, I noticed little change since I last visited it, when the battleship Prince of Wales and the battle cruiser Repulse were in port. They were sunk shortly afterward off the coast.

Shore positions were staffed by navy men, who gave proof that the raiders had not had things all their own way over the base.

We crossed the now empty causeway over the strait, speeding toward Johore's luxuriantly green foliage, over which towered the comparatively recently completed Johore government building and the green-glazed roof of the sultan's palace which shimmered in the morning sun.

On the Johore side of the causeway, I found plenty of activity. Shortened defense lines were most evident and vehicles of every variety were being utilized in this fast changing war in which time counts most.

Everywhere I saw a determination to delay and disrupt the Japanese as long as possible.

The natives especially were cheerful, holding their thumbs up in greeting and giving every cooperation to the soldiers.

The soldiers themselves are now completely bronzed except for a brief section which they cover with the shortest of shorts — the sole uniform of the Malaya campaign. But among them now are many men who are not bronzed, and evidently have just come into action.

The soldiers began moving cautiously out of the rubber fields and the ditches when suddenly a single Japanese bomber, diving out of the sun, came so low I saw its markings. I had scarcely thrown myself on the ground when machine gun bullets began spattering closely and the plane loosed its full bomb load.

I joined a group of British soldiers when the plane disappeared, and found them seething with anger. The bombs had upset the mess kettle in which they had just brewed a fresh lot of morning tea.

mean that fighting is continuing.

At Balik Papan, where the Dutch destroyed oil installations and stores even before the Jap invasion, "the biggest fire the world has even known" was said to have burned the town to a hollow shell.

Meanwhile, Netherlands Indies fighting forces had listed Japanese shipping losses at 54 vessels in the 54 days of warfare to date. A considerable portion of these, it was said, were sunk in the Macassar Strait.

Japanese bombers continued to range over the Dutch island and bomb scattered towns apparently without discrimination, said the Dutch military headquarters. A communique, citing the bombing of Sanana, a tiny village on little Sanana island half way between New Guinea and Celebes, said that having dropped incendiary bombs, Jap aircraft then machine-gunned the natives.

Crewmen Escape As Tanker Goes Down

(By Associated Press)

NORFOLK, Va. — A story of "bum shooting" on the part of unusually polite German U-boat crewmen was told by the 30 survivors of the tanker Rochester when they were landed today at the naval operating base here. The tanker was sunk in broad daylight off the Virginia coast yesterday.

The 6,830-ton tanker, riding light, was torpodoed without warning. The submarine pierced the aft portion of the ship with two torpedoes and fired 13 shells at the hulk.

The first torpedo hit in the engine room and trapped three of the "black gang" there. Captain A. L. Clark said the three men were instantly killed by the explosion or escaping live steam.

Captain Clark, a native of West Bedford, Mass., was not "too amazed" or "too confused," he said because in the first World war two merchant vessels were sunk under him by enemy torpedoes.

L. J. Davidson, of Little Falls, N. J., chief officer of the Vacuum Oil company tanker, related that two life boats were lowered within six or seven minutes after the first torpedo struck. A second torpedo was fired into the port side of the stricken vessel a few moments later.

Then the sub came to the surface and hurled 13 shells, several of them missing their target, Davidson said, because the "Germans were bum shooters."

"Even though they couldn't shoot, they sure were polite," Davidson said, "for when the sub started shelling the ship we were between the two vessels and in the line of fire. The submarine waved us away and someone on her shouted in English "Get out of the way. We are going to fire."

Two men were slightly injured when the torpedo struck.

Captain Clark said that if his ship had been armed the men might have protected themselves somewhat.

The skipper said he did not believe the submarine was large enough to cross the ocean, operate off the Atlantic coast and return to its home port. He would not comment, however, on the chances that a mother ship is being maintained for U-boats.

Pan-Maine Safe In Port, Un-Attacked

BOSTON—(INS)—Safe arrival at an undisclosed port of the 7,236-ton oil tanker Pan-Maine, feared to have been torpedoed by a U-boat, was confirmed today by the First naval district

The official navy statement disclosing the tanker's "brush" with a submarine read:

"The Pan-Maine has safely arrived in an Atlantic port with its crew of 30 men and 9 officers after an exciting trip of which the last few days were through very heavy weather.

"The ship had been previously reported attacked but it develops that this was not so, the premature report from the ship being due to the fact that a periscope sighted by Second Mate Melvin Hayes, of Baltimore and John Larnogicz of South River, N. J., both ex-navy men, was so close than an attack was anticipated.

"Periscope lost sight of after five minutes due to hazy weather."

Mansfield News-Journal

AN INDEPENDENT NEWSPAPER

MANSFIELD, OHIO, SATURDAY, JANUARY 31, 1942.

Drive carefully tomorrow—and remember, a car is no stronger than its weakest tire.

Patriotic bridge players are already beginning to ask what they can substitute for the customary rubber.

Notice is given that the $2.09 tax stamp on some of the more ancient cars shouldn't be mistaken for a price tag.

Singapore Makes Ready for Siege

WHEN Hongkong was surrendered to the Japanese, little more than a month ago, it was realized that Singapore would immediately become the next big objective of Japan's attack, and now the fate of that great British stronghold in the Far East is hanging in the balance.

The fall of Hongkong was explained by saying that there had not been enough time for Great Britain to prepare adequate defense to meet the Jap onslaught—but now that there has been another month for preparation and for the re-enforcement of Singapore, there will be cause for deep concern if that key city falls into enemy hands.

Close approach of Japanese forces to Johore strait, which affords a mile-wide separation of Singapore island from the Malay peninsula, indicates intention to put the city under siege and attempt to batter it into submission by bombardments from the air.

Whether this can be done, and whether Great Britain and the allied nations are succeeding in strengthening Far East defenses to the point of offering effective resistance at the gates of Singapore, are still problematical. Winston Churchill's frank announcement to the house of commons this week that the British have suffered serious reverses, and that "worse are to come," is interpreted in some quarters as intended to ease the way to later announcement of the fall of Singapore, but it is too early to accept such a gloomy forecast as an assured outcome.

Evacuation of a wide strip of land fronting on the strait is now shown to have been in preparation for withdrawal of British forces from the Malayan peninsula, after opportunity had been given, during the past several weeks, to prepare the island fortress for an inevitable siege.

Over the week-end, and until the issue has been decided, attention will be directed to Singapore as the scene of action in which the result will mean much in determining the length of war in the Far East, and of the extent to which United States force must be applied in that direction.

Pension Themselves In Secrecy

TAXPAYERS will await with considerable interest a more detailed explanation of the law under which senators and representatives in congress have voted themselves pensions, or "retirement pay," as they seem to prefer to call it.

To date, details of the congressional retirement program have not been made public and there is no available authentic data to show the retirement pay for senators and congressmen, proportioned to length of service.

While it is a matter of record that the senate passed the bill by a vote of 42 to 24 it appears that the house escaped the stigma of a record vote by the contrivance of putting it through on the "consent calendar", a method usually reserved for minor bills which it is deemed proper to pass without a vote of any kind.

One comment on this action, which is being adversely criticized all over the country, is that "this legislation would scarcely have been attempted had it not been for the confusion growing out of the war. In normal times such a grab would have been promptly aired and defeated."

The fact that the whole thing was cooked up and put through without opportunity being given for voters to express their views to senators and congressmen seems to justify a call by taxpayers for reconsideration of the action—with the vote of every senator and congressman recorded for public scrutiny.

'Off Limits' Areas Prescribed

ANNOUNCEMENT that twenty-four Ohio night clubs and liquor sales places have been declared "off limits" by officials of the army's Fifth Corps Area headquarters in Columbus, is accompanied by the statement that this action "does not reflect on the character of the institutions."

This is as it should be. Military officials are primarily interested in the sobriety and decency of men under their command, and, insofar as the general public is concerned, "the character of the institutions" at which liquor is sold is a matter for determination by the state liquor board, civil authorities and the public—which usually gets what it wants along the line of law enforcement.

It is rather thought-provoking, however, to find that soldiers are to be guarded against contact with certain conditions and influences which are left open to other young people—sometimes school children.

As much will be expected of other people, in their civilian tasks during wartime, as will be expected of soldiers in performance of their military duties.

It may appear later that what is not good for soldiers is equally bad for civilians.

Example of 'Action, Not Words'

AT A TIME when the need is for action, and also because verbosity is a rather common American trait, attention is attracted by the conciseness with which a U. S. navy pilot, whose identity has not yet been revealed, reported the sinking of an enemy submarine:

"Sighted sub: sank same," is the attractively alliterative way in which he gave all necessary information, vying with Julius Caesar's famous "Veni, Vidi, Vici," for brevity and completeness.

Considering the extent of official and unofficial oral and written verbiage, this pilot's succinct report is respectfully directed to the notice of speakers and writers—with senators and congressmen especially in mind at the moment.

"Remember Pearl Harbor"—at least to the extent of not letting any such thing happen again. But, for real inspiration, keep in mind what MacArthur and his gallant men are doing in the Philippines.

There are also "conscientious objectors" to tyranny—and, fortunately, these are in the majority.

There has thus far been no hint from Washington that there may be a shortage of carrots.

There's only one La Guardia—but he sometimes seems to think he's quintuplets.

Man About Manhattan

—By GEORGE TUCKER

NEW YORK—Here is a mythical Manhattan department store that would run Macy's and all the movie studios between here and Thebes out of business—if it could be assembled.

Bob Hope would take over the shoe department because once he sold shoes in Cleveland. . . . We would let Dorothy Lamour run the elevators because she used to operate one in Chicago. . . . Bing Crosby would be the cashier just as he used to be in Spokane, Washington. . . . And Jack Benny would handle the haberdashery because, unless he's been telling some awful whoppers, he learned how to retail neckties very early in life in Waukegan.

The drug department would be divided equally between Eddy Duchin and Charles Ruggles, as both were pharmacy students in their earlier days . . . Then there would be Madeleine Carroll, who modeled hats in London; George Raft, who used to work in a sporting goods store; Frances Dee, who worked at a hosiery counter before becoming a picture name; and Cary Grant—he would be chief floor walker—because he used to run a men's store.

THAT would leave the candy department to Ellen Drew, who once operated a candy business in Chicago; the musical department to Victor Schertzinger, a fine old piano salesman of talent, and the fashion dept. to Patricia Morrison, an ex-designer for one of Fifth Avenue's most exclusive stores.

For the holiday rush we could take on Garbo as a sort of extra added attraction, for she also has modeled and sold hats. And Sam Goldwyn could give Benny an assist at the gloves counter, for Sam was a traveling gloves salesman long before he ever thought of going to Hollywood.

ALL the dressing rooms backstage at the Strand, on Broadway, are named for different states. When Ozzie Nelson appeared there recently he told the management he wanted the warmest room in the place, and they gave him "Florida."

BETTY BRUCE thinks lawyers should explain technical details in everyday lingo, especially to clients who do not savvy technical terms. She went to her attorney for advice recently, and when he heard her story he launched into a lenthy discussion of the problem using legal terminology. Betty, slightly dazed, cried, "That's wonderful. That's a wonderful law to protect me."

"You don't understand," the lawyer explained. "That law favors the other side."

EIGHTEEN years ago students in the Sacred Heart Convent in London staged an amateur version of "Mid-Summer Night's Dream." . . . Two frightened little girls in the cast exchanged confidences. . . . "I'd like to be a real actress some day," said one. . . . "I would too," said the other. . . . One was Vivien Leigh, the other was Maureen O'Sullivan.

Rubber From Brazil Needed Now

—By DREW PEARSON

RIO DE JANEIRO—In 1876, Sir Henry Wickham, a man who foresaw the future role of rubber, came to Brazil, gathered 80,000 rubber seeds in a suitcase and planted them in Malaya.

Ever since then the United States has been buying its rubber, not from nearby Brazil but from Malaya and the Dutch East Indies.

At the time Sir Henry Wickham plucked 80,000 rubber seeds and put them in his satchel, Manaos, the rubber capital of Brazil, was one of the most prosperous cities in the world. To its opera house, one thousand miles up the Amazon, travelled some of the most noted artists of Europe.

Today, its opera house is as decadent as the once famous opera house at Silver City, Colo. Most of its houses are overgrown with jungle vines, river service has been discontinued. Today only about 9,000 tons of rubber finds its way down the Amazon and to the United States, while the remaining 600,000 tons, consumed by an American public which lives on wheels, has come from across the Pacific.

That is why one of the biggest things Brazil can do for the United States today is to help fill the rubber vacuum left by war.

Untapped Trees.

BRAZIL has two opportunities in connection with the American rubber shortage. One is an immediate supply of rubber. The other is the long distance supply, perhaps taking the place of Malaya.

Rubber trees take about seven years to develop to the point where they can be tapped commercially. And no matter how many rubber trees are planted immediately in Brazil nothing can be done to make them grow faster and supply the American rubber demand any quicker.

However, Brazil has one great asset which no other country in the world can supply. It has a tremendous tropical forest of rubber trees, growing wild, requiring no cultivation, which can be tapped immediately.

The wild rubber trees of the Amazon are estimated at between ten and 20 million. Most of them have not been tapped since the days of Brazil's ancient rubber boom. The chief problem, therefore, is labor. What Brazil needs to tap this vast rubber forest is an army of workmen able to withstand malaria and the fevers of the jungle.

U. S. experts are now discussing this problem with Brazilian officials. But they seem in no great hurry. At first it was suggested that American labor might be imported. Brazil, however, has immigration laws which might be a barrier, and there is some question regarding the use of American workmen for jungle labor.

No Rubber Surplus.

DESPITE the red tape of Washington and Rio, however, the fact remains that this is the only immediate large scale source of native rubber.

And even this will not be too large a supply. Producers of guayule rubber in Mexico and California have expressed fear of Brazilian rubber. However, the most Brazil can produce from wild rubber trees will be 60,000 tons annually—compared with our annual rubber consumption of 600,000 tons.

Congressmen sponsoring legislation for guayule rubber in our Southwest say the proposed new plantations cannot produce for five years, and then will yield only 75,000 tons annually.

So there should be no danger of competition—even when synthetic rubber factories, belatedly financed by Jesse Jones, get going.

The big question for Latin Americans is: Will they be favored when it comes to long term rubber production, or will the United States go back to the Far East.

Happiness Not Insured

—By ELSIE ROBINSON

SHE'S HAD a wretched life. A naggy home—an unhappy marriage that ended in divorce—and now love has come her way, again, at 33, and she is afraid to take it.

"How can you insure happiness?" she writes. "What can you fall back on if marriage turns out wrong? Keep a stiff upper lip and going on is okey in fairy tales—but when a girl gives up a good job, banks everything on her husband and then he fails her—well—"

How can you "insure happiness?"

You can't.

And why should you expect to? You weren't given life in order to find happiness. Happiness isn't the purpose of life . . . isn't even necessary to a great life. The purpose of life is Growth. You were meant to grow—to develop—that is the natural plan of your life, for all life. And you certainly can grow and yet remain what you call "happy."

For happiness means contentment—

And growth implies discount—

Happiness means comfort—

Growth implies discomfort—

Happiness means ecstasy—

Growth implies risk and danger—

Growth implies hardship, boredom, monotony—

Successful lives aren't happy lives. Successful lives are growing lives—lives that are continually reaching out, battling with hardships—

"Then why do people desire happiness so passionately if they weren't meant to be happy?"

Why do they want to be happy? For exactly the same reason that they want to quit their jobs, sleep until noon and stuff themselves with chocolate cake.

Because they're lazy, greedy and cowardly.

Of course we want happiness—we want anything that is easy and pleasant. But our "wants" are not the measure of what our lives should be. Your youngster wants lollypops instead of regular food. You can't let him have them. You want happiness instead of regular life. Don't let yourself have it.

The dream of happiness isn't a man's size dream—it's a lazy, stupid animal's dream. It's a greedy, timid child's dream.

And it's only a dream. Happiness really never happens—save in brief spurts.

Thank God it doesn't!

Paralysis would be a picnic compared to it.

And indeed that which we call happiness is usually a paralysis of thought and spirit.

"But what can we fall back on if happiness fails?"

Don't fall back on anything. Keep on going. Keep on going with life. Take life as it comes. Take life as an adventurer takes the jungle. He doesn't demand happiness in the jungle. He asks only adventure and he accepts fever, blisters, bites, hunger and drought as part of the price he must pay for adventure.

Accept sorrow and disappointment and monotony as part of the price you must pay for the adventure of living. Living is worth any price you pay.

How It Started

The Hollyhock.

Sometimes known as the rose mallow, this beautiful Asiatic plant that bears flowers in many tints really should be "holyhock," or holihoc, as it was at first.

The original form of the word supplies the key to its meaning, which is literally "holy," or "blessed," plus "mallow."

The mallow was the English flower of which the Crusaders in the Holy Land were reminded when they first saw the bloom they named the holihoc—holy mallow—and brought it back with them to England.

Everyday Poem

—By GEORGE ELLISTON

Mind For Company.

I store my mind with varied things.
I wish that it shall be.
A worthy friend and that it shall
Keep me good company.

A mind that's not comparisoned
With trappings bright and gay
As well as serious, is dull
At any time of day.

But if with scholarly and deep,
Hard facts you store the bright
And light and merry dreams, you have
Defeated drab and trite.

And mind will be good company,
Go with you, hold you up
As certainly as hearty food,
Good wine within your cup.

Summary of Week's Happenings

Weak Price Control Bill Passed; American Troops Land In Ireland

—By ASSOCIATED PRESS

A HALF YEAR after he asked for it President Roosevelt got a price control bill. But it was hardly the bill he asked for even though the joint committee had cut out two amendments most objectional to the administration.

Senator O'Mahoney's amendment linking farm price ceilings to urban wages was thrown out; as was a house provision creating a special review and appeals board with power to veto any price-fixing orders.

Still in it, however, were two big concessions to the farm bloc. Secretary of Agriculture Wickard was left with power to veto the price administrator's rulings affecting farm prices. And before farm prices could be limited they could rise to 110% of parity, the average price between 1919-29, or the level on Oct. 1 or Dec. 15, 1941.

More pleasing to the administration was the presence of original provisions enabling a single administrator to fix price ceilings over commodities and over rents in defense areas and to license buyers and sellers of all commodities affected except farmers and fishermen.

Virtually no one was entirely satisfied with the completed bill, but lawmakers assumed FDR would okay it (however reluctantly) in order to get some kind of price control started to head off the present inflationary trend.

At Home

Post-Mortem.

Ten days after warships and scores of bombers were destroyed at Pearl Harbor the commanding officers of the army and navy in the area—Lieut. Gen. Walter Short and Admiral Husband Kimmel—were relieved of their commands. Soon afterward the Roberts commission began investigating to fix the blame for the disaster. Who were responsible: the men in the ranks, their commanders, or Washington officials?

On Saturday the commission turned in its report. The bulk of the blame, it found, was with Short and Kimmel. They were guilty of "dereliction of duty."

They had been warned to prepare against an air raid by Washington. They failed to confer. They refused to believe an air attack possible.

Yanks In Ireland.

People of Northern Ireland first began noticing they had friendly strangers in their midst a half year ago. The men, dressed in gaudy checked shirts and high-laced boots of lumberjacks, were American technicians.

They were said to be building carefully camouflaged huts, warehouses and depots—all brought in numbered sections from U. S. factories—among the forests and rolling hills of the area. The work was being carried out under the Lease-Lend act.

On Monday the vanguard of an AEF arrived in Northern Ireland. Residents had been watching for it for months. But so great was the secrecy surrounding the Atlantic crossing (where U-boats also were watching for the expedition) that only a small crowd was on hand.

Soon the troops had been whisked off to the billets already prepared by the American technicians.

Labor's Peacemakers.

Cartoonist Berryman of the Washington Star drew chuckles from capitalites by depicting John L. Lewis being left at the church. A rival, CIO President Murray, was tripping off with AFL President Green for a honeymoon in a limousine labeled "Labor Peace" which was chauffeured by Franklin D. Roosevelt.

That about summed up the situation. Lewis, ex-president of the CIO, had taken it upon himself to propose a CIO-AFL peace to Green. Neither FDR nor Murray wanted the recently-isolationist Lewis to be able to take credit for peace in the labor movement. In addition they thought a complete AFL-CIO merger would create a lot of friction that production officials are anxious to avoid now. Thus FDR proposed a new and simpler scheme.

He proposed "a combined Labor War Board" composed of three men from AFL and three from CIO. If and when a jurisdictional dispute or any other matter relating to labor's participation in the war arose, the members would talk it over with FDR. Both labor groups promptly accepted FDR's scheme.

A Missouri Mob.

Army Sergeant Dillard Sturgeon was stationed in California. His wife was back home in the cotton milling community of Sikeston, Mo. (Pop. 8,000, one-fourth Negro.) Early last Sunday morning she was stabbed and seriously wounded. Police say a 30-year-old Negro, Cleo Wright, confessed the crime. He was suspected of attempted rape.

That day as Wright was held in the city jail a crowd gathered outside but was persuaded to disperse. It soon reassembled and stormed the jail. Officers were overpowered. Wright was taken to the Negro quarter and dragged through the streets behind an automobile. The body was cut loose, drenched with gasoline and set afire.

Consumption Curbs.

Ration books are being prepared for the housewife for buying sugar. Price Administrator Leon Henderson says there is a shortage of one-third in the sugar supply; that sugar will be rationed at the rate of about three-quarters of a pound per person a week. He also hinted that attempts will be made to recover stocks held by hoarders.

A new "Victory Suit" for men will hit the fashion market within the next month. It will be minus a vest, cuffs, pleats, belt or suspenders. If American men accept it, about 30,000,000 yards of wool cloth can be saved annually, one New York tailor estimates.

Unity—Almost.

By closing time of the Pan American conference in Rio all Latin nations except Argentina and Chile had severed relations with the Axis.

Meanwhile the political committee of the conference agreed: (1) to approve the principles of the Atlantic Charter (Eight Points) which embodies the war aims of the United Nations: (2) to declare the U. S. and her allies non-belligerents; (3) to call an immediate meeting of the general staffs of all American nations.

Abroad

Churchill and His Critics.

Britons were in an ugly humor. Every newspaper in London was calling for a shake-up in the Cabinet. Though Winston Churchill's personal popularity was still strong, he clearly faced the most serious challenge to his leadership since he took office 20 months ago. His countrymen had several reasons to be restive:

1—Much of the Far Eastern part of the empire was imperiled.

2—His Majesty's fleet had lost three giant capital ships in two months—the Prince of Wales, the Repulse and the Barham. All were sunk by air attack.

3—In Libya, the elusive German General Rommel had turned on his British pursuers and chased them back 150 miles from El Agheila.

4—The Dominion of Australia, threatened with Japanese invasion, was sharply demanding a voice in imperial war councils and was slapping Britain by looking to America for help.

While one newspaper editorial was complaining that "our war machine still carries too many duds and deadheads," Churchill arose in the house of commons to defend his government.

He knew he personally could weather the storm, so he gathered all his maligned lieutenants under his skirt, personally took the blame for all that happened and defiantly called for a vote of confidence, which he received—464 to 1.

After his speech, a Conservative of his own party said that for Churchill to ask for a vote of confidence "is like hearing the parson propose a vote of confidence in God." The debate fizzled out.

Nearing Singapore.

The Japanese drive for Singapore pressed relentlessly closer to the island bastion. On Wednesday the British command ordered the evacuation of all persons and livestock from a mile-wide coastal strip on the north shore of Singapore island.

Sheer courage, stubbornness and ingenuity were about all that kept the American-Filipino forces of jaunty General MacArthur fighting on the Batan peninsula against overwhelming superiority during their fourth week under siege. Japanese landed at night in Subic Bay to their rear. Thus outflanked on their left the defenders had to retreat with considerable losses. MacArthur relieved the situation with a heavy counter-attack on his extreme right and scored "a smashing success."

Timely Editorial

Farmers Ask No Favors.

Farmers are just as patriotic, just as willing to do their share to help win the war, as anyone else. We've always been convinced of that, but additional confirmation came in the Associated Press' report of typical comments at the 30th annual Farmers' week at Ohio State university.

"The American farmer doesn't care for profits so much as to win the war, said one man. "Profits are secondary," said another. "They're ready to operate their farms without profit, if necessary, to beat Hitler," reported an extension agent.

All of which strengthens our belief that it was not the farmers but rather a small group of politicians, totally misrepresenting the farmers' wishes, who have been responsible for a price control bill which is lopsided.

Of course, the farmer deserves a fair return for his product. But he doesn't deserve—nor does he ask—preference over all other groups of society.—Akron Beacon Journal.

HOROSCOPE

By GENEVIEVE KEMBLE

For Sunday, February 1.

SUNDAY'S horoscope is favorable for all matters concerning church, state, and those in high power in affairs generally. All such affairs should be expansive, productive and give personal satisfaction. Yet such good influence might be defeated by a conflicting state of mind, at war or in discord with the senses, emotions and impulses, with superiors or those in authority.

If It Is Your Birthday.

Those whose birthday it is, although having splendid auguries for success and the fruition of cherished ambitions and personal desires, these may be nullified by tempestuous, ungoverned, confused or discordant conflicts between the mentality and the emotions or impulses.

A child born on this day while having many kind, congenial and benevolent traits of character may be obstinate, capricious, contentious, variable

For Monday, February 2

Monday's astrological forecast is for very conflicting situations, with several complicated and perplexing testimonies. While sentimental or intimate relations have some happy factors yet there is hint of extravagance of feelings and emotions as well as funds. All may unite to spell estrangements or sudden disruptions. With tact, courtesy and strategy benefit may develop but be wise in travel and change. Be cautious with papers and writings.

If It Is Your Birthday.

Those whose birthday it is may have a year of test trial, conflict and confusion, with their own inner conflicts at the root of loss and inharmony.

CHAPTER XXII

"Is . . . is mother very . . . ill?" Linda was half afraid to speak, afraid her father's answer might prove that her trip home had come too late.

"She's much better now," he replied. "The doctor said she was out of danger and getting along fine."

"I—I understood she was gravely ill," Linda said puzzled. "Your telegram—"

"We were afraid you might not want to come unless you thought it was urgent." He was placing her bags in the car.

Linda was weak with relief. "I guess I had that coming, Dad," she admitted. "I have neglected you, I'm afraid. I—I wanted to come home so many times, but I thought you might not want me."

"We—we've hoped you'd come for a long time now, honey." John Phillips cleared his throat. "Wewell, we're sorry about everything. We didn't understand." His voice trailed into silence. It was the closest to an apology that the proud, old man had ever come, and Linda was content.

There were tears in Mary Phillips' eyes as she greeted her daughter; tears of weakness. Happiness! Linda tried futily to swallow the strange lump in her throat. She did not know she could experience such happiness at her home-coming.

"You had me worried to death," she scolded when she could speak naturally. "Father said you nearly had a nervous breakdown."

"I'm feeling much better now," her mother answered, gazing at Linda's radiant face.

Hours later, seated at her mother's bedside, Linda attempted to explain her own marital mixup, knowing she could not reveal the whole truth to these simple middlewestern people whose lives had been so placid and devoid of treachery and intrigue.

"I—I thought I loved Greg," Linda admitted in reply to her mother's inquiry, "but after I met Steve, I knew he was the only man in the world for me. Steve was leaving to spend the winter on his farm, and I married him so I could go with him. It was sudden—surprising, I'll admit, but not a mistake."

It had been exactly like that, but no one hearing the lilt in the girl's confident young voice, or seeing the sparkle in her eyes, could doubt her present sincerity.

"Then—you are happy?" Mary Phillips asked anxiously.

Linda hesitated. She could not honestly say the last few months had been entirely happy ones, and yet, with the remembrance of Steve's arms around her and the tenderness in his eyes as they said good-bye still fresh and vivid in her mind, all the disappointment she had known seemed petty now.

"Of course I'm happy."

"You're not — sorry you left home and went to Chicago?"

A thousand times Linda had wished that she had stayed in Prairievale. "I would never have met Steve, had I stayed at home," she told her mother.

"I've never been able to understand it," Mary Phillips said. "You were happy here, Linda. You and Kyle had been engaged for four years. Your hope-chest has never been touched and Kyle is hoping you've come back to stay."

"I'm sorry, dear," Linda was strangely touched. "Kyle can't bear defeat."

"He has a good job now," her mother went on. "He could even build a little home and you wouldn't have to work. Kyle could take good care of you."

* * *

A smile played about Linda's mouth as she remembered her own lovely apartment overlooking the lake; the beautiful, rambling farmhouse with its rows of stables; the cars; her jewels. She realized for the first time that her parents could not understand her new wealth and position. Perhaps news of Steve's best-seller novel had not reached Prairievale.

"When you are stronger," she said kindly, "you and Father must come and stay with Steve and me on the farm for a while."

"But you were never meant for farm life," her mother fretted, weakly, "and with the burden of two more on your hands—"

"I have two housekeepers, a man and his wife, to take care of the farm, and a personal maid for the lighter work."

For a moment Mary Phillips lay silent, and then, cautiously, she whispered, "Then—you . . . really have . . . lots of money?"

Linda patted the hand lying frail and white on the coverlet. "Steve has been very successful," she answered.

Linda spent a week in Prairievale. Contrary to her first thought, news of Steve's book had reached the village, and the wife of its author was feted at luncheons and teas, and a dinner by the Literary Society of Prairievale, at which she was slated to deliver a speech.

Sally had arranged it. The same bubbling, good-natured Sally, still loyal, still unquestioning. Her warm friendliness made Linda ashamed that she had ever neglected her friend by allowing so much time to elapse between letters. She despised herself even more for giving Sally the same explanation that had sufficed for her parents but Sally accepted it in good faith and with the airy comment, "I always said there's nothing as unpredictable as love."

Speaking before the Literary society, Linda talked simply and honestly of the hard work involved in writing a successful novel. She gave a short sketch of Steve's average day, filled with appointments, lectures, the long hours spent autographing books in leading department stores. The picture she painted was filled with romance as she touched lightly on Steve's love of horses, their life at the farm. She described Steve so realistically that it left her weak with excitement and yearning to see him again.

But despite her longing to be with her husband, Linda hated to leave her parents. For them the time had passed all too quickly and Mary Phillips clung to her daughter's hand when the time for leave-taking arrived.

"I've scarcely seen you," she murmured tearfully. "You'll come home again, won't you?"

"Of course," Linda promised.

By the time the train neared LaSalle Street Station in Chicago, Linda was fairly trembling with excitement. Her wire to Steve, announcing her arrival, had been devoid of the emotion she was experiencing.

What would Steven say, she wondered, when they came face to face? Would he take her in his arms and say all the things his once brief letter had left unsaid, or would words be necessary—now?

* * *

At last the train stopped and as Linda stepped on the platform her eyes searched the crowd for Steve. For a moment Linda stood puzzled and perplexed. Surely Steve had not misunderstood her telegram, but she saw no familiar face in the station. Steve had failed to come!

Then, suddenly, a familiar feminine voice carolled: "Linda! Here I am—over here!" It was Diane, she was breathless. "I thought I'd never get here!"

"But where's Steve?" Linda said anxiously. "I sent him a wire asking him to meet me. Why isn't he here?"

"Steve was called to New York and had to leave immediately. He asked me to meet you and explain."

"New York? But why?"

Diane shrugged. "He said something about a motion picture company wanting to buy the book, or something like that."

Linda stopped short, "Not really! Diane, how can you be so calm when something as wonderful as that has happened!" Her disappointment at not seeing Steve was forgotten in her present happiness.

"You're pleased?" Diane smiled at Linda's radiant face.

"I feel like celebrating, Diane. Let's stay downtown for lunch?"

"I suppose I should be working," the artist laughed. "But—all right, Linda. You name the place."

When they were seated in a fashionable restaurant, Diane said anxiously, "How is your mother?"

"Feeling much better, thank you. She promised to come to Chicago for a visit when she's completely well."

"And—Prairievale?" curiously.

"Nothing is changed," Linda answered. "It looks just the same. It is the same. Jane Miller is still typing letters for Harcourt, Simmons and Hanover. Kyle is working—and plugging along as usual. Sally and Hugh are sublimely happy and expecting a blessed event in the spring."

She described her activities—the lectures, the teas and dinners, and Diane laughed. "What a difference from your former life there. Would you like to return to that way of living?"

Linda could not suppress a shiver at the thought. "It doesn't seem possible that I ever lived there, and yet I suppose I was happy. Of course Sally and Hugh aren't tied down, and they can pick up and leave if it becomes boring, but my life wouldn't have been like theirs.

"I would have had a little house, children, but there would always have been insecurity. Something would have been lacking. I think that thing would be—harmony."

"And you have that quality with Steve?"

Linda hesitated. Why was Diane always so curious, so prying when it came to her relationship with Steve? Did the artist suspect theirs had been an unusual marriage?

"Naturally," she said, and although it had not always been true still the future seemed rosy and bright and Linda felt she was committing no falsehood in her reply.

Smiling a little she lifted her head to glance around the well-filled room, and in that instant her air-castles tumbled. With the color draining from her face she stared at the beautiful gowned, ashen-haired woman seated in a secluded booth across the room. Brenda Coleman, Brenda, laughing, assured. And her companion? One glance showed Linda—Brenda's companion was — Steven Baridon!

Brenda was speaking, confidently looking into Steve's face, and as Linda watched, frozen, the girl's hand crept into Steve's and nestled there.

Without a word Linda pushed back her chair and got to her feet, her one desire being to leave the room unnoticed. One glance at her face and Diane's head turned to view the cozy scene. Then, silent, she rose and followed Linda onto the street.

"Linda—" she began uncertainly.

The other girl did not see her. Her face was like a mask, disbelieving. Cold.

On sudden inspiration, Diane took her arm. "You're coming up to my studio," she said firmly. "It's only a block away, and we can walk."

Linda started to protest, then, docilely, she turned and walked down the street. Brenda and Steve! It was unbelievable. Steve was in New York—or had that been merely his way of refusing to meet her? She had been mad to think his good-bye kiss, his murmured words had meant anything.

"You jumped at conclusions once before," Linda told herself. "And look what happened. Don't be so gullible this time."

In Diane's studio she collapsed, weeping. Then she poured out the entire story, sparing no detail in a description of her happiness on the farm, of Steve's kindness and generosity.

"I love him so much," she said, "and I thought that he loved me, too, but I was wrong. It was Brenda. It has always been Brenda. She's been like a ghost between us and I was a fool to think he would ever forget her."

"I've suspected something like this," Diane admitted, "although I didn't think it was quite this way. I'll be frank, honey, in telling you Brenda is a bad enemy. She has made Jerry's life a living torture despite his love for her, and once she makes up her mind to win Steve back again—"

Linda made a noble decision. "Steve was very good to me, Diane, when I needed understanding and kindness. It's only right that I should try to remedy a bad mistake."

"What do you mean?"

"I mean that I won't stand in the way of Steve's happiness. Knowing him, I'm afraid he would never say anything, but leave the decision to me. If I can show him I don't care—"

"But you do care!"

"You must forget all that I told you," Linda said quickly. "Swear to me, Diane, that you will never tell him anything I've said, no matter how important it may seem to you."

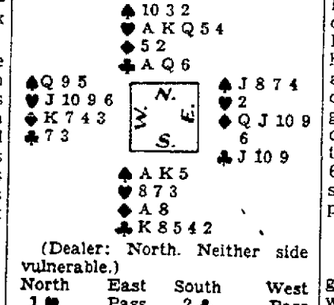
BARCLAY ON BRIDGE

By Shepard Barclay

"The Authority on Authorities"

DON'T BE GREEDY

APPRECIATIVE players, who are able to see that their contract might have been beaten if a different lead had been made, will sometimes play the safe way to be sure of making it at all, whereas others view the good fortune of a lucky lead as presentation of a chance to make an extra trick. The difference between them does not show itself so clearly in rubber bridge, as you cannot be sure then just what the other fellow would have done, but in duplicate you can look at the scores and see what he actually did do.



(Dealer: North. Neither side vulnerable.)

North	East	South	West
1 ♥	Pass	2 ♣	Pass
3 ♣	Pass	3 ♠	Pass
4 ♥	Pass	5 ♦	Pass

Better bidding would have prescribed a rebid of hearts by North on his second turn, instead of a raise of the clubs with only three cards, but the side would then have landed in the correct contract of 6-Hearts, which cannot possibly be made because East's natural lead is a diamond, which would compel one loser in that suit and one in hearts.

Several pairs got into 6-Clubs, however, in the nationals at Richmond, Va., some making it and some failing. All got leads other than diamonds, for the obvious reason that nobody likes to underlead a king. It was a trump or a heart in these cases. Those who went for the extra trick by dropping trumps, then trying to run hearts, found the suit failing to break. Lacking a re-entry then to the dummy, they had to lose a spade and a diamond, and so were set.

Only one declarer was caught in the act of making a safety play for his contract, in gratitude for his lucky lead, which was the heart J. He won that in dummy, took three high club tricks and then led a second round of hearts, letting West win it. After return of the spade 5 to the 10, J and A, he was able to run the rest of the hearts and discard both the spade and the diamond losers in exchange for the one heart he had given up. That gave him top score on the deal, most emphatically top, as he was not in 6-Clubs but 6-No Trumps after almost the same bidding as landed so many pairs in 6-Clubs or 6-Hearts.

"Pitfalls of Love"

(A Sequel to Marriage Meddlers)

By ADELE GARRISON

There was something of the same stark fear in Stephen Redfield's eyes, as he put his question to me, that I had seen in them the night before when he had heard Noel's voice in the hall, and had realized that Mary's husband was again hunting him with something very like murder in his heart.

I loathed his cowardice even as I assuaged it, for I knew that if I did not allay his fears there would be no possible chance of renewing the confidential chats he had been carrying on with Mary.

"Oh, yes, I have seen both of them," I said. "Noel is very much ashamed of himself for his outburst last night. Of course he would never admit it to you, but he is exceeding remorseful. It is not a nice thing for a man to realize how nearly he came to killing an other man," I threw in for good measure—and was maliciously glad to see Stephen Redfield's face grow pale at the words.

Reassures Redfield.

"But I am sure he never will give away to his anger again in that fashion," I went on. "In fact"—I did a bit more elaborate embroidery of facts—"he has promised his father, Mary and me that he never will let himself go like that again."

"I should hope not," Redfield said, with a smugness that made me yearn to silence his lips with a resounding slap. "An attitude like his makes the ordinary amenities of theatrical life almost impossible."

"Yes, I can imagine that," I said. Then he put another query in embarrassed fashion.

Tries To Pump Madge.

"And Mary?" he queried. "I could not quite understand her attitude last night. She did not appear to be resentful against Noel, at all."

He was plainly pumping me, for he had no idea how much I knew of the verbal flagellation Mary had given him.

I was quite proud of the light laugh I gave as he uttered his plaint. I was sure Philip Veritzen would have given it the accolade of his theatrical approval.

"You ought to know Mary by this time," I said. "You have acted the role opposite to her often enough. She is theatrical to her finger tips, thrills to any melodramatic situation. It was wonderful to her last night to have Noel rise to such heights of rage.

"For one thing I do not think she had ever considered him capable of such murderous anger, and when she realized that she was the cause of it, she was his champion for a while, ready to fight anybody for him.

"I don't believe she found anybody to fight, however," I said with another laugh, which I tried to make sound indulgent as well as amused, "and the poor child was pretty well deflated this morning."

"I haven't seen Mary so distinctly in the dumps for years," I went on, "but all I could get out of her was, 'Oh, I've made such an anointed idiot of myself, Auntie Madge, but there's nothing I can do about it.'"

Again my fingers itched to slap the smug face opposite me, for it now bore a smile which was the Cheshire Cat's own grandchild.

Steve's Inflated Ego.

"Mary is such a temperamental child," Stephen Redfield said with indulgent condescension. "By the way, is she anywhere around? There's something I'd like to tell her."

I knew what he meant by that. There was something he'd like to hear from her—an abject apology for what she had said to him the night before. He never would have that, I knew, and I was not sorry to put a little pinprick in his inflated ego.

"She's won't be around all the afternoon," I said. "She and Noel have gone out for an outing somewhere."

The knock of room service put a period to my sentence, but Stephen Redfield managed a sneering response.

"How charmingly idyllic!" he said, and I sensed the venom in his voice.

Hint Axis Maneuver In Mediterranean

(By Associated Press)

A hint of possible Axis maneuvers to challenge British control of the Mediterranean on an unprecedented scale was contained in a third-hand report today that passenger train service will be sharply curtailed in Italy tomorrow.

The report came through Exchange Telegraph, a British news agency, from Zurich, Switzerland, and quoted Rome dispatches.

Restrictions on civilian railway traffic have frequently attended large troop movements within the lands dominated by Adolf Hitler. British intelligence work already has disclosed an unusual concentration of German planes in southern Italy.

Mobilization aimed at knocking Malta out of the war would be a logical development of Axis strategy following the surprise successes of Field Marshal Gen. Erwin Rommel in recapturing Bengasi and driving back the British from other newly won Libyan bases.

On the Russian front, recapture of 46 more villages and towns was reported by the Red army in its drive against German winter lines in the center and south.

The Germans, while officially dismissing Nazi withdrawals as inconsequential adaptations to Arctic fighting conditions, broadcast warnings from Berlin to western Europeans on "what a Russian conquest would mean."

Tygers Win Slow Scoring Game at Bellevue 28 to 25

Sport Podge

by REX HESS

I hear that prominent Mansfield high school alumnus, ex-Tyger tosser, and class president, Jack Shiplet, won't be among us after the week-end. Operative A-17, on the bucketball front, informs me that Shiplett'll be shovin' off for Louisville and a job in the new Westinghouse armament plant come Monday.

City News cagers wouldn't let Jack play with the Athletic Supplies last Tuesday night in their battle for first place in the City "A" league, and I don't blame 'em.

Seems Shiplet didn't get hot in the sharpshooting department until after his graduation a week ago from the high school.

He played with the Supplies at Loudonville last Monday night, and a checkup of the box score showed that of the 39 points tallied by the Athletics, 30 were pushed through the hoop by Shiplet and Bruce McGinty, his Tyger teammate of last spring.

"It's the first time this season," quoth Jacques, "that I've really hit on that one-handed shot." Tyger Coach Vern Hoffman may be found on bench No. 1 at the wailing wall.

Now if I were a City "A" league manager (and very happy I am that I'm not) and wanted to win a few ball games and maybe a championship in that circuit, I'd keep the old optic peeled every spring for graduating high school basketballers.

In that kind of ball, the boys who are still in shape to run, and run, and keep running, are very apt to run the legs off the old timers.

But I learned last fall that few teams in the league are interested in injecting new blood into their organizations.

I tried to give at least three teams a pair of young basketball players, and got the same answer from all three: "We're down to the limit now, and don't want to let our old fellows go."

The players I tried to give 'em were Manstield Braves, who should have been in good shape after a season of baseball. They were Chuck Byers, who had played considerable semi-pro ball in Pennsylvania, and Dick Morse, who had performed on some of the best independent teams in Toledo.

Since then Byers has gone to the army, but Morse is still in town, and not playing basketball. It's probably too late to do anything about it now, but their presence in uniform might have lured a few baseball fans to the City A games.

Capital Wins Game on Fouls

Staves Off Marietta Rally to Stay In Race.

(By Associated Press)

Capital university's basketball team is past another milestone today on the long road towards the Ohio collegiate basketball championship. The Caps stood off a determined last-half rally by Marietta last night to win, 54 to 51.

The game was won from the foul line, Capital sinking 16 free throws and Marietta scoring only three. The win was Capital's eighth of the season and sixth in the Ohio conference race. The only other undefeated Ohio college team is Mt. Union with 10 victories.

In the only other league game of the evening Ohio Northern swamped Findlay, 57 to 27.

Wooster romped to an easy 82 to 33 victory over Wilmington to tally their 10th triumph in 11 starts. Akron university scored its eighth victory in 10 starts by topping John Carroll at Akron, 58 to 48.

The seven-inch chameleon can capture a fly 12 inches away, without moving. His artillery consists of a tongue longer than himself . . . a lightning-like, sticky-tipped weapon which is shot out of the mouth in much the same way that a watermelon seed can be shot from between the fingers.

The Atlantic swallower is a fish that can actually swallow another fish larger than itself. The stomach stretches until it is so thin, as to become transparent.

Yuncker's has become a popular place for expert skate sharpening. A special machine imparts a keen, hollow-ground edge that adds greatly to the fun and enjoyment of skating. And don't forget that Yuncker's have shoe skates, too, for both men and women, priced from $3.75 and up.

Success in Americanizing the European wild boar hasn't been duplicated in the case of the grouse, a favorite game bird abroad. These birds have been brought repeatedly from northern Europe to Maine, New York, and many parts of Canada . . . but haven't taken hold yet. And it's a pity, since the grouse would make sporty shooting.

The sycamore tree puts on its "overcoat" in winter, and takes it off in summer, just as humans do. It is an odd procedure for a tree, though. Ordinarily bark is shed in winter and acquired anew in summer.

* * *

Nature has given animals many different kinds of talents or powers, and among these is the ability to hang upside down. The sloth always moves about trees upside down, while the opossum has a tail strong enough to be wrapped around a limb, so that he can swing in the air, head straight down.

PUBLICATION OF REPORT ORDERED

Judge Rules Auditor Data Must Appear In Daily Paper.

(By Associated Press)

LANCASTER — In an action generally considered a test case, Common Pleas Judge Frank M. Acton has ordered Fairfield county commissioners to raise money to publish a detailed or long-form county auditor's report in the daily Lancaster Eagle-Gazette.

The action probably will determine whether publication of a short form fills statutory requirements and whether publication was satisfactory in a weekly paper which called itself Independent Republican in political affiliation.

Judge Acton held that "Independent Republican" was not regarded as a political party. The auditor was directed to publish the report in a paper with a definite political affiliation, but since neither the weekly nor the Eagle-Gazette had a definite affiliation, Judge Acton said the report should be published in the two papers with the largest circulation in the county. The long report already had been published in the weekly and the decision required that it also be published in the Eagle-Gazette.

WELL, I NEVER--- AND YOU HAVE THE NERVE TO STAND THERE AND ADMIT IT! I SHOULD THINK YOU'D BE ASHAMED!!
GOSH!! GRANDMA, WE ONLY DID IT FOR YOUR BENEFIT...

SISTER'S GOIN' TO BE PRETTY SORE!! I'M SCARED TO GIVE IT TO HER!!

LITTLE ANNIE ROONEY

GLORYOSKY, ZERO--BUT IT'S GRAND! DID YOU EVER SEE SUCH A GREAT, BIG HOTHOUSE IN ALL YOUR WHOLE LIFE?
YOU KNOW, MR. OLIVER IS AWFUL SMART-- BEFORE HE CAME HERE TO LIVE, THIS PLACE WAS A BIG SUGAR FACTORY AN' THIS HOT-HOUSE WAS A GARAGE AN' STOREHOUSE--
THEN, ONE NIGHT THE SUGAR FACTORY CAUGHT ON FIRE AN' THE FRONT PART OF THE FACTORY WAS ALL BURNED UP-- BUT THE REST OF THE BUILDIN' WAS ONLY BURNED A LITTLE BIT--
DARRELL McCLURE
THEN MR. OLIVER MOVED INTO THE EMPTY FACTORY AN' WHEN ANY POOR ORPHANS CAME ALONG AN' DIDN'T HAVE NO PLACE TO LIVE, MR. OLIVER WOULD ASK THEM TO BE HIS GUESTS--NOW HE'S GOT LOTSA GUESTS AN' EVERY-BODY'S HAPPY!
GOOD MORNING, OLIVER, IT'S ALWAYS GOOD TO SEE YOU, IN SPITE OF THE FACT THAT YOU ALWAYS TRY TO EMPTY MY CASH-BOX BEFORE YOU SAY GOODBYE
BANK
NOT THIS TIME, JIM--LIKE THE REST OF THE WORLD, MY GUESTS AND I HAVE TIGHTENED UP OUR BELTS AND ARE WORKING HARDER AND FASTER TO CARRY OUR SHARE OF THE LOAD--
THE RESULT IS WE WILL DOUBLE OUR CROP OF BABY PINE TREES THIS SPRING--I WANT YOUR ADVICE ON HOW AND WHERE TO SELL THEM
IT SHOULD BE EASY--THERE'S A BUYING MARKET FOR MOST ANY-THING RIGHT NOW
DARRELL McCLURE
GEE, ZERO, IT'S HARD TO BELIEVE THAT SOME DAY THIS TINY, LITTLE, BABY PINE TREE WILL BE A GREAT, BIG TREE WITH FOLKS SITTIN' UNDER IT SAYIN', "MY GOODNESS, BUT IT'S NICE AN' COOL AN' SHADY HERE"
HA, HA--
HEY--WHAT ARE YOU LAUGHING AT ME FOR? DO I LOOK LIKE A MONKEY OR SOMETHING??
I'M NOT LAUGHING AT YOU-- I'M LAUGHING AT THAT POSY YOU'RE WEARING ON YOUR COAT--I'VE SEEN KIDS WEARING CARNATIONS, DAISIES, ROSES--
ONCE I SAW A RICH LADY WEARING AN ORCHID--BUT IT'S AWFUL FUNNY TO SEE A KID WALKING AROUND WEARING A PINE TREE FOR A POSY--
DARRELL McCLURE
SEEMS JUST LIKE WALKING AROUND IN THE RAIN, USING A MUSHROOM FOR AN UMBRELLA--HA, HA, HA, HA--
GEE--HAPPY HANNA KIN THINK OF THE FUNNIEST THINGS
BONG BONG BONG
CLASS IS DISMISSED!
COME ON, ZERO--I GOT A FREE HOUR JUST TO HAVE FUN--THEN I GOTTA BE BACK AN' HELP GET STUFF READY FOR SUPPER
GEE, IT'S SWELL BEIN' A GUEST AT MR. OLIVER'S HOUSE --THE TIME PASSES SO FAST, A DAY GOES BY JUST LIKE A COUPLE OF HOURS
LAST WEEK I WAS TEACHER AN' IT WAS LOTSA FUN, BUT I HAD TO WORRY 'BOUT ALL THE KIDS GETTIN' THEIR LESSONS RIGHT--NOW I'M A PUPIL AGAIN AN' I DON'T HAVE TO WORRY 'BOUT NOTHIN'
DARRELL McCLURE
YOU KNOW, I WAS JUST THINKIN'--THE LITTLE PINE TREES ARE JUST LIKE LITTLE KIDS GOIN' TO SCHOOL
PINE TREES ARE LIKE KIDS?? WHAT'S THAT, A RIDDLE?
I GUESS IT'S A KIND OF A RIDDLE-- YOU KNOW KIDS GO TO SCHOOL TO LEARN HOW TO GROW SMART--- PINE TREES GO TO A SCHOOL IN A HOTHOUSE TO LEARN HOW TO GROW TALL--
IF THE LITTLE KIDS AN' THE LITTLE TREES DO WHAT THEY OUGHTA DO, THEY'RE MOVED INTO A HIGHER CLASS--THEN, WHEN THEY'RE FINISHED IN SCHOOL THEY'VE GROWN BIG AN' STRONG AN' ABLE TO TAKE CARE OF THEMSELVES--
DARRELL McCLURE
I GUESS THAT'S WHY MR. OLIVER SEZ WE GOTTA BE TERRIBLE CAREFUL TO SEE EACH YOUNG ONE GROWS UP STRAIGHT AN' STRONG--'CAUSE IF THEY'RE CROOKED, THEY'LL NEVER AMOUNT TO MUCH WHEN THEY'RE GROWN UP
MY GOODNESS GRACIOUS--THIS HASH TASTES NICE
I LIKE HASH, 'CAUSE IT'S SO EASY TO EAT--YOU DON'T HAVE TO CUT IT OR PICK ANY BONES
AN' IT'S NEVER TOO FAT OR TOO LEAN
AN' THERE ARE NO BEST PARTS IN A PLATE OF HASH --ALL HASH IS BORN EQUAL AN' LIVED
I READ IN A BOOK THAT EVERY FOOD CONTAINS A DIFFERENT KIND OF A VITAMIN THAT YOU HAVE TO EAT TO BE HEALTHY--IN HASH YOU GET 'EM ALL AT THE SAME TIME
DARRELL McCLURE
I GUESS EVERYBODY IN THE WHOLE WORLD LOVES HASH, NO MATTER WHAT THEY CALL IT--THE RICH FOLKS LIKE HASH, BECAUSE IT'S GOOD--AN' THE POOR FOLKS LIKE HASH, BECAUSE IT'S GOOD AN' CHEAP!

IT'D BE MORE OF A SURPRISE, IF YOU DIDN'T HAVE THE RING!
BESIDES, DAD SAYS HE'LL GIVE US A HOUSE FOR A WEDDING PRESENT!
HOW PERFECTLY SWEET OF HIM!
